For a love of good food that's sustainable

By Olivier Ginon Chairman and CEO of GL events

Behind the palatable pleasures of haute gastronomie and haute pâtisserie, represented by the Bocuse d'Or and the World Pastry Cup, lie the major challenges of our society: finding a balance between the conservation of resources, the need for good taste and a new love of food that's sustainable.

A vast programme, launched confidently and conscientiously by the entire profession through these two competitions – unique in the world – which naturally find their place at the heart of Sirha Lyon 2023. The 40th anniversary of Sirha Lyon consecrates this substantial work carried out by all in catering and hospitality to permanently instilling the themes of eating (well), designing better and living better at the core of our society. A whole chain of values is thus grounded in the 140,000 m² of Sirha Lyon.

From the production of raw materials to the final plate, from the design of kitchens to innovation in equipment, the 4,000 exhibitors and brands at Sirha constitute the avant-garde in global food service. May they be thanked here for their commitment alongside GL events. Welcome to Sirha Lyon 2023!

Feed the kids

By Jérôme Bocuse President of the Bocuse d'Or President of Sirha Lyon

What could be more powerful than the new overarching theme of the Bocuse d'Or 2023 – where each candidate must dream up an entire menu for children? I see in this new kind of challenge the expression of a competition experience that has never been so close to the big questions of our time and of a society in its quest for meaning.

A world confronted by the challenges of nature and of the transmission of values: to feed the next generation better. This is the very essence of the Bocuse d'Or, in its excellence that transcends Great Cuisine to inspire everyday life and shape the future.

The 2023 edition of this competition wanted by Paul Bocuse fully reveals its global and humanist dynamic where 24 finalist countries, from the selections that all took place "in the physical" – apart from those in Asia, which were exceptionally made on the basis of a dossier – proudly welcomes newcomers New Zealand and Mauritius. Proof, if needed, that the Bocuse d'Or network continues to expand to new horizons. I extend my best wishes for success to all participating in this competition, which is stronger and more exciting than ever.

Global and international

By Luc Dubanchet Director of Sirha Food

Sirha Lyon defends its belief in a landmark global trade fair devoted to food, food service and catering. Because the market and the stakes are planetary. And because it's fitting for the major event media that is Sirha Food, bringing together food service calendar highlights at GL events, to extend a "global proposal" to its visitors by showcasing the widest range of products, solutions and services ever gathered on the 140,000 m² of Eurexpo Lyon.

Seven full exhibition halls, 12 sectors, thousands of references, and hundreds of innovations offered by 4,000 exhibitors and brands from 40 countries. After the pandemic, it is a source of pride for Sirha Lyon to once again devote almost 25% of its space to the international arena. Sirha Lyon's ambition is to promote business and foster connections with its visitors. All while serving, through its Sirha Food Forum, the Innovations and Futur(e)s Food prizes, the Catering competitions, and the Bakery-Pastry and Coffee contests, the dynamism of professions which never stop reinventing themselves. It's the best way to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Sirha Lyon.

Incubator series

By Hannah Benayoun

Since 2017, Sirha Lyon has been hosting a handpicked group of companies at Place des Lumières, representing the best of the food service start-up scene in France. In January 2023, Village by CA (Crédit Agricole) will inaugurate its third reception area for young entrepreneurs who have come to present their innovative projects. Initiated by the CIC in 2017, the Village was a space dedicated to some 10 companies. Two years later, the partnership with Crédit Agricole was sealed to welcome around 30 companies with various profiles. At each edition, the diversity of the start-ups present brings a new dynamic, another impetus to food service.

The 4 pillars

This year again, 30 start-ups are taking up residence at Eurexpo, sharing the 235 square metres of space reserved for exchanges, business meetings and discussions between entrepreneurs, exhibitors and visitors. In 2023, four distinct directions have been taken to bring consistency and clarity to the Village: innovative beverages, plant-based alternatives to animal proteins, food tech – mainly targeting the innovation of consumable products, thanks to original raw materials – and finally, small-scale eco-responsible equipment. All are innovation-driven but none serve the same product.

Diversity above all. Among the pool of companies present, 50% direct their activity towards more plants, on the plate of course, but also beyond its confines: Good Vie and its fruit kefir, Morice desserts and a range of plantbased yoghurts, Papa Chiche and its chickpea snacks, to name but a few. The table is becoming ever more plantbased, thanks in particular to cutlery made from wood fibre waste, designed by BINI. Certain beverages are also making a strong comeback. From the sparkling with a CBD twist to plantbased milk alternatives, and from skyr to the unbeatable kombucha, companies are anchoring themselves in the market trends that started a decade ago and which continue to trace their furrow in food service.

Helping restaurateurs: the expected chapter?

The global context of catering, shaken by the consequences of the pandemic and beleaguered by recruitment issues, has also encouraged entrepreneurs to focus their innovation efforts on providing more support to restaurant owners. One of the 30 companies is Ecotable, which is familiar with the Sirha Food ecosystem and helps restaurant owners make their establishments more environmentally responsible. Their label certifies that a restaurant is making a real shift towards more sustainable dining.

In addition to supporting a more responsible conversion, the food tech industry has fostered rivals in creativity to imagine the latest tools to facilitate payments, remittances and reservations. Restaurant advice, applications and labelling have been a saving grace for a sector in which recruiting has become a major hurdle. The Village is therefore giving pride of place to practical solutions: Ecorestauration and its menu management for institutional catering, TIPSI and electronic tips, GR.APP for wine and champagne transactions, and FULLSOON, which offers a waste management solution for restaurants. x

Investigation

Technological innovation in a time of frugality?

By Quentin Guillon Illustrations: Morgane Fadanelli

Sirha Lyon is the not-to-be-missed meeting place to learn about and discuss the major movements in the restaurant and food industry. More than 350 novelties and innovations will be presented again this year. Frédéric Loeb, conductor of new trends at the trade fair, gives us an overview of what's on the horizon.

Innovation is the successful exploitation of new ideas which have found their market. It is also the creation, development and implementation of a new product, process or service, with the aim of improving effectiveness, efficiency or competitive advantage. In short, an innovation improves what already exists.

For years, Sirha Lyon has been anticipating and supporting the major movements in the restaurant and food industry. This 21st edition is no exception to the rule, especially in an overarchingly turbulent context, where global warming and its consequences are shaking up our habits and calling into question our dietary models. How can innovation, which has become a backbone of research and development for food service companies, participate in and contribute to changing our behaviour? Frédéric Loeb, an expert in new trends from Sirha Lyon, guides us through the "Innovation" highlights of the trade fair.

Twelve awards

The first part explores and distinguishes "the most relevant innovations in relation to the most foreseeable developments in the food service market", explains Frédéric Loeb. These new products are available in three categories: products/beverages; materials/services/new technologies; and eco-responsibility. Sirha Lyon presents 12 awards in total, in these three categories. Rather than gadgets, the aim is to give priority to innovations useful to the profession, in a move to anticipate future trends. This is in addition to the criterion of durability/sustainability, which has become paramount in recent years.

"We are always in a tension between respect for the environment, frugality, local and the practicality of using restaurants," analyses Frédéric Loeb. An oxymoron that is not easy to grasp... How can we reconcile technological innovation, which by its very nature consumes resources, and the imperative need for frugality dictated by the current context? "We must learn in our professions to juggle between nature and technologies in order to reduce our carbon footprint and be restrictive in terms of energy expenditure," asserts the founder of Loeb Innovation. The major innovation trends identified for 2023 fall into three areas. Technonature presents original plant-based alternatives, such as Jay&Joy (vegan Parmesan), PLNT (vegan salmon) and Accro (butcher-style vegan ground beef). The worlds of modernity and escape are summoned via new recipes with innovative technologies, like Boncolac (macarons with a melting centre), Barry (cocoa powder decoration), Norohy (Tadoka, the right dose of vanilla) and Raps France (microencapsulated salt), as well as via products and ingredients that have been little or never seen until now. For example, green chickpeas from Bonduelle, Iberian lamb ham from Cook2cook, roasted camelina oil from Olimega and yacon syrup from RCT.

The vernacular names of "material" innovations should not obscure their relevance, from human wellness to the need to consume less but better. Some examples? ARI.O (Angelo Po), an intelligent system that combines high-level functionalities and minimal handling (cooking, cooling, preserving, regenerating, maintaining the temperature and finally serving) in a single piece of equipment. The Brum'Tech hood (Alvene) was designed using an eco-responsible approach: it incorporates a compact water recycling system and thus allows for substantial savings.

Pluma (Duni) paper cutlery, consisting of a fork, a knife, a spoon and a spork (a hybrid between a fork and a spoon), is made from cellulose fibres.

A Start-up Village

More than 25,000 chefs from around the world will immerse themselves in the innovations of 30 start-ups in the Village (and many others throughout the trade fair). They make up a heterogeneous public, from independent chefs/restaurateurs to collective catering managers. Entrepreneurs sometimes have an esoteric language far removed from the daily life of the "brigades". This is one of the pitfalls to overcome so that the language of startups adapts to what chefs experience on a daily basis.

The processes for optimising day-today work are also highlighted in the Start-up Village, specifies Frédéric Loeb. If the energy issue has become central, the workforce itself has also become a pressing concern since the pandemic. Technology cannot do everything – which is why the profession has increased salaries – but it can simplify recruitment (in speed-dating mode, for example) or speed up learning procedures. Innovation is a process of trial and error. So it's success... and failures. Frédéric Loeb talks about the artificial intelligence being applied to the creation of dishes. A start-up had the idea of scanning thousands of recipe cards. The goal was to juxtapose very different culinary cultures. Frédéric Loeb had, in this manner, tasted a spiced beef with bananas, at the crossroads of American and Creole gastronomy. He pronounces the verdict with a smile: "A disaster! AI does not (yet?) have taste." x

Turkish baristo-logy

By Audrey Vacher Illustrations: Morgane Fadanelli

Three national coffee competitions take place during this Sirha Lyon: the Coffee in Good Spirits Championship, the Barista Championship and the Cezve/Ibrik Championship, a first in France.

These Turkish terms refer to what is likely the oldest coffee pot in the world or, at the very least, the most popular form of coffee preparation in the Middle East, an Ottoman tradition. It's simple: just add coffee and water to a saucepan – the ibrik or cezve – and bring it to a boil. Ibrik coffee has been part of Ottoman coffee culture for centuries, in this case the 16th century, after an Ethiopian governor brought coffee beans as an offering during a visit to Constantinople. All that was left was to sow the seeds.

The ibrik or cezve

Metal

Because it diffuses heat better and more evenly, copper is the preferred material for ibriks. But they are also available in brass or stainless steel.

Heat

To be able to control the brewing time, you must have a temperature that you can control. The preparation time for Turkish coffee that almost boils does not usually exceed 2.5 minutes, because the grind is very fine, like flour. Using a microburner or the stove top is the most common way to brew this style of coffee; the sand method is a rare sight usually only seen in cafés or in competitions. The main difference is that when using the micro-burner or stove, the heat is applied directly to the bottom of the ibrik. Thus, it heats the water from below. Hot sand, on the other hand, heats the ibrik a little more evenly because most of the device is buried in it.

The ratio

The Turks will say 1 teaspoon of coffee per cup... It is estimated that a good ratio is around 1:8 and 1:9. That's about 4 grammes of coffee per cup. Or 7.5 grammes per 75 millilitres of water.

Water

Start with mineral water (tap water does not mix well with this type of preparation), previously heated to reduce the cooking time.

Method

To stir or not to stir, that is the question. What we know: adding the coffee after the water without stirring and letting it gently dissolve allows for a creamier foam.

Serving

When the coffee rises and comes to a boil, it's time to serve. In one go for some, two for others who put half the coffee back on the flame to bring the foam back up a second time. It is usually served with a glass of cold water to refresh the palate before tasting, sugar and sometimes infused with spices (cinnamon, mastic, cardamom).

Specialty coffee, what is it?

The term was born in the 1970s in the United States, to describe a rare and superior quality coffee. If we were talking about wine, we would use the term "Grand Cru". The specialty coffee wave reached Europe in the 1980s, and in 1982, the Specialty Coffee Association of America (SCA), whose role was to ensure the quality of the coffee and to organise world championships, codified the beverage as follows:

"Specialty coffees (or gourmet coffees) are defined as high-end coffee-based drinks to which the consumer (in a specific market and at a given time) assigns a unique quality, distinct and superior taste and character compared to an ordinary coffee-based drink. This drink is prepared using green coffee beans grown in specific areas, and meeting the most demanding standards in terms of production, processing, roasting, conservation and preparation."

The origin of the coffee determines its aromatic profile, guarantees the growing conditions and the harvesting method. The more a coffee tree grows at a high altitude (1,200-1,400 metres), the more its grains are dense, and their aromatics complex. The flavour profile of the bean changes depending on its processing. As a general rule, the more pulp a bean has when drying, the more likely the coffee will have sugar and body in the cup. Roasting should not take precedence over the flavour of the coffee. We can count on an optimal aromatic complexity until about a month after its roasting. After this date, the flavours settle. All coffee is rated with a quality score out of 100 points. Professional and certified tasters, called Q-Graders, note each particularity of a coffee (aroma, taste, texture, uniformity, etc.) following a process called "cupping". When a coffee is rated at more than 80 points, it is said to be "specialty".

French Bakery Cup Bon voyage

By Audrey Vacher Illustrations: Morgane Fadanelli

With the conquest of outer space as the theme of the French Bakery Cup events, in the Artistic Buffet and Bakery Food Test (Snacking) categories, the Public Prize, on the sidelines of the main competition, requires the creation of a travel cake fit for the journey to the final frontier.

But what is a gâteau de voyage? In a nutshell, it's a cake with a long shelflife (more than three days at room temperature, sometimes up to eight days, even several weeks), without cream and that is easy to transport, resistant to shocks from bumpy journeys and temperature fluctuations. It's typically a teatime cake that can be taken on a trip.

We candidly asked Rémi Bouiller, recipient of the Prix Pâtissier at the Omnivore Food Festival 2022, who runs the Kreme tea room in Montrouge: "If I say gâteau de voyage, what comes to mind?" His spontaneous reply was "Cake". Indeed, "cake" can be considered as the first known mention of a gâteau de voyage, dating back to the 17th century, thanks to Madame de Sévigné, in her famous letters to her daughter. Renowned for her sweet tooth, the marquise ordered some from her pastry chef for her journeys from the Palace of Versailles to Brittany, Brittany, which prides itself – without wanting to relaunch the "Is Nantes Breton?" debate – of having created the first gâteau de voyage: the Nantes cake. Except this moist pound cake, rich in butter and almonds, soaked in rum and lemon, and enrobed in rum-infused royal icing – a direct result of Nantes' trade with the West Indies, the source of a number of goods, including cane sugar, dark rum and spices – would have been made, in 1820, with these ingredients by a certain Monsieur Rouleau, a local master fouacier (the fouace, a round, airy bread scented with orange blossom water, is nonetheless a tradition from Aveyron, in southern France). It was therefore at this time that the term gâteau de voyage took on its full meaning with Nantes cake. Thanks to its long shelf-life – up to three weeks sailors took it on board for their sea crossings. Having fallen into oblivion in kitchens, it was brought up-to-date in the 20th century by the LU biscuit factory, which produced it until the 1970s.

In the basket of gâteaux de voyage, you can almost take a tour of France, or even a tour of the world: Basque cakes, Marseille navettes, Lorraine madeleines, Breton kouing-amann and buttery palets, Bordeaux canelés, Parisian financiers (in the shape of an ingot, or bar of gold, designed to the delight of financial professionals working in the area surrounding the Paris stock exchange), nonnettes from Dijon, Creusois cakes, etc. The American brownie and cookie, the English muffin and pudding, and the Japanese chiffon cake also fall into this category. It is up to the contestants for the French Bakery Cup to invent a gâteau de voyage that will withstand the journey to the International Space Station this year. Each day, randomly selected members of the public awarded a prize for that achievement. x

Pastry World Cup Cédric Grolet, a president's quotes

Interview by Hannah Benayoun Photo: Calvin Courjon

Accompanying Pierre Hermé, president of the World Pastry Cup, as well as the entire jury made up of international pastry chefs and cooks, is Cédric Grolet, honorary president of this 34th edition. With 20 years of experience, Cédric Grolet, one of the prodigies of French pastry, was named "Best Pastry Chef in the World" in 2018.

After five years at Maison Fauchon Paris, he joined the kitchens of Le Meurice in 2011, then directed by Yannick Alléno, before opening, in 2019, his famous boutique Cédric Grolet Opéra, in Paris. Since 2022, his art of pastry has also been exported across the Channel, thanks to the opening of his boutique Cédric Grolet at The Berkeley, in London.

Point of honour

"It is above all a source of pride for me to be the honorary president of this World Pastry Cup but also a huge responsibility. I have to be fair, present and 100% available for all these candidates from all over the world."

Creation

"For creativity, I obey a kind of logic-funnel. When I think of a dessert, lots of things go through my mind and I apply this funnel rule: I am going to remove everything that is useless to stay focused on things that are very simple, very pure, elegant, not sugar decoration or chocolate, not a logo."

Eco-conscious

"I have three boutiques, with different identities. I am not looking to multiply my offer by having 50 locations here or elsewhere in the world – that will never interest me. The more you want, the more you will consume, the more you will destroy and the more losses you will have. I have never thrown away a cake in my life; all my packaging, down to the cutlery, everything is recycled. I work as close as possible to my producers. I know how they work and I also know how their animals are treated, for example."

Re-creation

"When I fashion my cakes, I never mix flavours. I want the first spoonful to signal what we are going to taste. I do my best to keep a taste as raw as the one that nature could give me. I don't want to mix different flavours. When I created Fruits, I was tired of receiving pears, cutting them in all directions, to see them end up in squares or circles. I worked with various varieties.

I wanted to prepare them differently, season them, gradually getting closer to cooking. By simply seasoning, I respect nature and what it gives me."

Reflection

"When we talk about competitions, we emerge from a certain comfort, from a daily regularity. We turn to a 'less pleasant' comfort that pushes us to surpass ourselves, and we can accomplish things that we do not know we are capable of doing. When I think of contests, it reminds me of sport, surpassing oneself and evolving. I have always liked competitions; I did a lot of them when I was younger. They contribute to developing our professions."

Pride

"When Pierre Hermé asked me to take on this role, I appreciated that he showed me that trust, also towards my work. I will do my best; I want to make myself available to do things well."

Mauritius Finally, a first

Text: Audrey Vacher Illustrations: Morgane Fadanelli

From its first participation in the Bocuse d'Or Africa in September 2022, Mauritius has distinguished itself by winning and qualifying for the final in Lyon. It owes its success to a cosmopolitan and nevertheless typical cuisine, a delicious reflection of the island's history and the cultural diversity of its people.

More than half the population of this small island in the Indian Ocean, a maritime crossroads for trade routes between Europe, Africa and Asia, has Indian origins, from southern India in particular, the departure point for the first "coolies", low-wage labourers who arrived in the 19th century after the abolition of slavery on the island. In their modest luggage were recipes and culinary traditions that now characterise contemporary Mauritian cuisine: the "cari" ("curry" for Westerners) or the "briani", special dishes of the day and for Mauritian celebrations par excellence. The Sino-Mauritians also contribute to the richness of the flavours of the local cuisine with their Cantonese know-how. Most hail from south-east China and the Henan province in central China. Hunting and fishing, hobbies of wealthier individuals of French or English descent, bring the Western dimension of the local cuisine with ragoûts and other stews of small or big game, and recipes from the sea seasoned with spices and aromatics. As for the Creoles, known as the "general population' (meaning "born on the island"), they "eat what they are", i.e. a melting pot of all the cohabiting cultures. Their specialty: the typical Mauritian meal, a plate made up of white rice, brèdes (see opposite), legumes, fricasseed vegetables and a rougaille or a curry. The island imports 75% of its food needs and sources the rest on the local market. Thanks to its immense sugar cane fields (78% of the total agricultural area), the island has long produced sugar and today produces internationally renowned rums. Coffee trees, tea plants, orchards and vegetable gardens also dot the agricultural landscape.

Open to the world, Mauritius is always delighted to exchange with and enrich itself through all cultures - now even in the context of a global contest. Participating in the Bocuse d'Or has thus been a dream come true. "It is an opening into the Bocuse family and that is an opening to the world. It's the door open to all the possibilities of propelling yourself onto the international stage," declared Emmanuelle Coquet, kingpin of the competition she discovered in 2011 while attending her first Sirha and promotion director of the Bocuse d'Or Mauritius Academy, founded in 2020. "We have dreamed of this competition for 10 years; we have struggled for its realisation and today it is the concretisation," declared the chef Nizam Peeroo, president of the Bocuse d'Or Mauritius Academy and of the organising committee of the national selection that saw the formation of the winning team of the Bocuse d'Or Africa in Dakhla, Morocco. The experience of a lifetime for Kritesh Halkory, the head chef at the fivestar Constance Prince Maurice, his assistant Brady Ng Fuk Chong – crowned best assistant at the competition – the executive chef at the Prince Maurice hotel unit, the coach Michael Scioli, and Nizam Peeroo, the chef at the Labourdonnais Waterfront Hotel, who together constituted the "magic square" of the African stage of the very first Mauritian journey to the "Olympics of Gastronomy".

Chef Kritesh and his team wowed the jury with a gilt-head sea bream on the plate, garnished with brède mouroum (see opposite), the mandatory local ingredient; and a themed platter (the creation of a Mauritian artist who had been inspired by the local mangroves) devoted to saddle of lamb. Prakash Seetul, another member of the committee, projected himself, already in Lyon: "For a first round, I think our young people did quite well. It will now take a mastery of stress and the supercharged atmosphere at Sirha." x

Brède mouroum Moringa oleifera

Mauritius won the Bocuse d'Or Africa in September 2022 in Dakhla, Morocco, surprising in particular with the local ingredient that had to be integrated in the recipe for the "best platter" event. Kritesh Halkory opted to showcase brède mouroum to garnish his gilt-head sea bream – a move that enabled the team to reach the first final in the island's history.

"Brède" is a typical name of the Creole of the Indian Ocean, generic for vegetables whose leaves or shoots are eaten cooked, usually boiled. Borrowed from Portuguese (the first to settle in Mauritius), "bredo" is a term whose primary meaning is amaranth (Amaranthus blitum). This word is found in the Spanish "bledo" and the French "blette". There are an incalculable number of brèdes in Mauritius (brèdesonge, malbar, chou-chou. chinoise, giraumon, martin, and cress are the most popular with the population). "Mouroum" comes from "moringa", which in turn derives from the vernacular Tamil name "murungai", transformed into "mouroungue", then finally "mouroum" in Mauritian Creole.

Botany

Moringa oleifera, belonging to the Moringaceae family, is a tropical tree native to India but also found in Africa, Asia and Latin America. It is able to grow in both rich and poor soils. A food plant with 92 nutrients that can reach 10 metres in height, it is one of the richest foods on the planet.

Consumption

Growing in abundance and inexpensive (300 rupees a bunch, i.e. €6.60. but in Mauritius, we tend to get it at the neighbor's, who is always happy to be rid of this invasive plant), the brèdes are prepared in broth, with a dash of oil, garlic, fresh onion and thyme. We use the leaves, small in size, which we separate from their stem. The tender young pods and the finely chopped leaves serve as a garnish for vegetable dishes and salads. Ripe seeds are sometimes removed from mature pods and eaten like peas or roasted like nuts. At the end of the meal, it is often served as an infusion: the leaves are dried and then crushed to obtain an emerald-khaki green powder

ste

Slightly bitter, brède mouroum is most often cooked in broth with the leaves, in saffron-scented dholl (a thick, spicy split pea soup) with the sticks stripped. Stewing or sautéing brèdes is also possible, depending on the variety. Its fruit, roots, leaves and flowers are used in the preparation of vegetable dishes, soups, sauces, fritters, seasonings, condiments, oils and drinks. Traditionally, it accompanies a dish of rice, served with salted fish, cooked in rougaille (a local tomato-based. spicy sauce) or fried, and a condiment, a coconut chutney with green chilli and mint, for example.

A powerful natural anti-inflammatory, anti-microbial, antibacterial, antifungal and antitoxic, its leaves are rich in vitamins A, C, B and E and high in potassium and calcium. In Guinea, they are said to be able to treat "300 diseases" ranging from arthritis to diabetes, including rheumatism, epilepsy, kidney stones, hypertension and hypotension.

The oil extracted from the seeds is known for its moisturising and restorative properties.

International Pavilions

A royal road for Saudi Arabia

Text: Audrey Vache

Saudi Arabia is making its debut at Sirha, an essential step for the Kingdom in its strategy of openness and international development.

"We consider culture and recreation to be indispensable to our quality of life." This is one of the slogans of Vision 2030, Saudi Arabia's political, economic and social strategy, carried by Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman and launched in 2016 to shield themselves from the collapse of oil prices between 2014 and 2016 and to project the Kingdom into a new phase. After Bedouinism and the oil era came the oil counter-shock: The Kingdom had become aware of its inability to withstand for long the enduring fall in the price of "black gold", which constituted more than 90% of its budgetary revenue, i.e. approximately US$250 billion.

Saudi Vision 2030 revolves around three pillars: "a vibrant society" (reaffirmation of the place of Islam, transmission of the national heritage and improvement of the standard of living); "a prosperous economy" (investment in new areas, privatisation of the economy and regional and international attractiveness); and "an ambitious nation" (legislative reforms, improved efficiency and accountability of government bodies).

This working order directly reflects on the health of Saudi food service, valued at US$45 billion and representing the largest market in the Middle East. In terms of outlook, the Saudi Authority forecasts a 6% annual increase in consumption, boosted by the changes brought about by Vision 2030. Fine dining is becoming international, mainly in Riyadh and Jeddah; Michelin-starred chefs are flourishing... Anne-Sophie Pic, Adeline Grattard, Emmanuel Renaut and Guy Martin went to Hegra, listed as a UNESCOWorld Heritage Site, to cook in the historic Nabatean city; and the three-starred English chef and restaurateur Jason Atherton opened the first permanent gourmet restaurant in the ancient city of Al-'Ula in 2021. Another notable trend: the rise of food banks (2.1 million meals in 2019) and a pronounced interest in locavorism, fast casual, delivery and dark kitchens. An estimated 61% of consumers say they want to spend money on restaurant experiences, and 40% of local Millennials crave more exoticism and novelty in food offerings.

The culinary arts, pillars of development

In parallel, the Saudi Culinary Arts Authority initiated a new development plan, supported by five key pillars. They encompass identifying and preserving the origins and heritage of cuisine, providing world-class culinary experiences to local residents and visitors, and developing and promoting the culinary profession in the Kingdom. Within the framework of these pillars, the Authority has planned 12 practical programmes, among which are the preservation of culinary heritage, a visual and audio culinary library, the promotion of the local sector and menu standardisation, international exchanges, food tourism, a pilot course in Saudi culinary arts, new regional food festivals and a culinary careers programme.

For example, Generation 2030, created in 2019, aims to bring together young Saudi and French talents from all walks of life and to implement joint actions in order to build cultural and social bridges between France and Saudi Arabia that foster strong and lasting connections. In this fashion, Le Cordon Bleu, the world's leading network of culinary and hospitality schools, is opening an institute in Riyadh by the end of 2023. Among the courses on offer is a programme dedicated to Saudi cuisine, with the aim of showcasing local gastronomy, flavours and ingredients.

As for local flavours and ingredients, the Kingdom is betting on Saudi coffee, the preferred term for Arabic coffee. The region of Jazan, in the south-west of the Kingdom, is now world-famous for its red Khawlani coffee beans, which the population traditionally infuses with cardamom and saffron to prepare "gahwa", served with dates, another national emblem, as a sign of generosity and hospitality.

The Kingdom's Ministry of Culture designated 2022 as the Year of Saudi Coffee, celebrating the authentic taste of a local staple. At the end of 2021, the Kingdom had 400,000 coffee trees across some 600 farms, producing 800 tonnes of coffee beans per year. That's a drop in the bucket compared to the Brazilian or Ethiopian giants, but Saudi Arabia intends to develop the cultivation of Khawlani and to have such knowledge and practices inscribed on the Unesco Representative List of Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity. x

Energy conservation at Sirha Lyon

GL events, the world leader in events, continues to affirm its desire to offer increasingly environmentally and socially responsible events, in line with its CSR policy implemented over a decade ago. Thus, Sirha Lyon 2023 has put in place solutions for evolving into a trade fair that is more respectful of the environment.

The number of ISO14001-certified French sites managed by the GL events group that have obtained ISO 20121 certification, the only CSR standard specific to the event industry. This makes GL events the first network of certified event spaces of this magnitude.

Decreasing the "set point", i.e. the constant temperature to be maintained during an event, by 10% compared to the previous edition. This is what the events sector has pledged itself to in one of the charters signed as part of the French government's plan for energy conservation (targets: reducing energy consumption by 10% by 2024 and by 40% by 2050) for companies in trade, crafts and tourism. Studies produced by Ademe, the French environment and energy management agency, and other organisations estimate that lowering the heating by 1°C cuts 7 to 30% of energy use.

Everything happens on the SIRHA FOOD² app, which allows visitors to take full and at-their-fingertips advantage of the event: the centralisation of key information (map, programme, exhibitors, etc.); networking bringing together exhibitors and professionals; the creation of customised visits and bookmarking of favourites; the building of personalised address books, thanks to integrated badge readers; videos; streaming and news feeds. A Forum for feeding tomorrow

From the climate emergency, health and geopolitical crises, and population growth to questions about energy conservation, food concentrates a large part of the challenges of a world in flux. More than 80 speakers, professionals, experts and researchers exchange solutions and points of view at the Sirha Food Forum, Sirha Lyon's discussion space. During the five days of the trade fair, Sirha Food unveils its reflections on five main topics.

Consume less but better

The years pass, resources become increasingly scarce, and the answers to the major food service questions - what to eat and how to do it tomorrow – become clearer. The topic spans everything from scenarios addressing changes in consumption patterns to new distribution channels.

Technonature

With its "beef effect" on the environment, breeding and its sustainability raise questions. Whether industrial or reasoned, lab-grown or free range, urbanised or "reterritorialised", innovation here consists in improving what already exists. Ecological agriculture, certainly less productive but definitely less harmful, deserves consideration in an increasingly digitised world. In catering, in this vein, we no longer swear by seasonality and short circuits. Or how to learn commitment at the table. And in the glass, because this year the Forum invites viticulture to learn from the resilience of this agricultural sector which has been particularly shaken by climatic variations due to global warming.

Human wellness

The direct link between diet and well-being (and its cousin, health) is well established. The meal thus represents a key moment which can aid institutions welcoming a specific public, such as hospitals, nursing homes, etc. Between reducing food waste, integrating short circuits, controlling the impact and getting back on its feet after the combined damage of the pandemic, lockdowns and remote working, institutional catering has its work cut out for it. Just like catering, which struggles to support and retain teams in the midst of the flight towards more satisfying jobs.

Creation as an escape

Cuisine needs new dreams, observes Sirha Food. In the meantime, it is revisiting its classics, sounding the return to grace of bourgeois and ceremonial cuisine. What does this say about the cuisine of tomorrow? What experiences, what products, what techniques can we still explore to revive the imagination? In the agrifood industries, everything is based on the research and development function. New recipes, new products (food, processes, packaging, etc.). Creativity fascinates. How can we dream up the product that will cause a sensation tomorrow?

Cook, make, pass on

While there seems to be no technical limit to robotisation – algorithms now come up with recipes; robots take charge of service, making pasta or become pizza makers, etc. – the human gesture still and always fascinates, in haute couture as in the kitchen or in the dining room. How can we imagine the future of the "human touch" of tomorrow, in the digital age? It's a window of hope for those in the culinary profession, which is now highly visible on all digital networks.

Alexandra Pech on eating well

By Hannah Benayoun Photos: William Lacalmontie

Human wellness is the theme defining the contours of the third day of the Sirha Food Forum, which is focused on institutional catering. At a time when school canteens, dining halls and cafeterias continue to feed the debate on food, Alexandra Pech, a doctoral student in geography and anthropology at the École normale supérieure de Lyon (ENS de Lyon), dissects how young people cultivate their taste and improve their diet at school and beyond. For our conversation, she chose a compelling setting, the Petites Cantines branch in Perrache, one of the neighbourhood canteens of this non-profit network where guests welcome and meet one another through meals that are sustainably sourced, participatory and free.

What do the recent consecutive crises reveal about the eating habits of young people today?

It's an almost philosophical question. There are cultural issues of interest relating to the subject of food, education... What does it mean to feed children well? It is not a mere question of supply in terms of agricultural or processed products. We also talk about access. There is a quality food supply, but do people have the financial means to access it? Without having an overall analysis of the last 10 years, the Covid-19 health crisis coupled with inflation, all these situations have weakened purchasing power and, in turn, the access of the most financially insecure and the youngest to good food. These crises made it possible to pinpoint situations that already existed. These situations have gained visibility, particularly in the media. The pandemic and inflation have relaunched a series of reflections on these social inequities. Since then, initiatives have emerged, such as social security for food. Researchers and various associations are in the process of brainstorming solutions at the political, local and also governmental levels to support the most at-risk members of society so that they can have a good diet.

Canteens crystallise passions in France. What is the challenge behind this food space for youths?

The canteen arouses passions in our country. In France, we give a large space to the canteen because it reflects the importance we place on meals, on the time allotted for the lunch break, between one-and-a-half and two hours for students to spend around the table. For decades, political choices concerning canteens have been made to regulate school catering: we are talking about regulations and laws pertaining to what children can and cannot eat at school. In France, this may seem obvious, but in Mexico, for example, I was able to observe that these supply regulations in schools were only very recent. Sodas and junk food were still present. Here, the ban on distributors of drinks and processed foods dates from 2004–2005. There is therefore the concern for the health of our children but also the need to support our industries – this is one of the challenges of the canteen. The EGalim 1 law, enacted in 2018, pertains to institutional catering and stipulates that, by 2022, canteens needed to serve a certain portion of products from French agriculture deemed to be sustainable, organic, labelled...

Can school canteens can be an important means of supporting farmers?

Institutional catering can be a lever of support and has indeed been so since the postwar period. Children were encouraged to drink more milk to support the dairy industry during the 1950s. In the United States, too, there was a movement grounded in this area. It also raises questions: Is all this known? Are students aware of the political agenda around healthy eating? To what extent can the meal in the canteen be an educational moment as well?

It's not just at school; food education goes through alternative pathways. Where are we at in France?

The very expression "taste education" is interesting. The French school system has specifically retained "food and taste education". The words are not neutral because if we compare ourselves to our neighbouring countries, France emphasises taste and the equally hedonistic dimension of food. Other countries place more emphasis on nutrition or health, especially in North America. Does food education only go through the experience of taste? Learning to recognise fruits, vegetables, to appreciate the flavour of a dish... In this field of education, there are other initiatives that are advancing in parallel with the French school system: the École Comestible and the Réseau Marguerite, which promotes agri-food education and which emphasises the agricultural dimension – the entire chain of actors, from farm to table. The curriculum goes through what it is to cook, to have a critical look at food production, to understand the remuneration of farmers... This taste education embodies various purposes. Like education on sustainable development, it is not compulsory; teachers have the choice to mention these topics in their course and elsewhere. Hence the

"The challenges of the canteen: our children's health and the need to support our industries" importance of these initiatives and external organisations that can provide keys and tools to teachers.

How does food knowledge differ among adolescents from urban and rural backgrounds?

This is a question I asked myself during my thesis. What impact does where we live have on our knowledge of food and our relationship with it? We were once in a different dynamic; the population was much more rural. Today, the share of farmers in the French population is estimated to be only 1.5%. Between two secondary schools in Ain and the inner suburbs of Lyon, I was able to observe that the students were not aware that there was agriculture close to home; even in suburban areas, agriculture was geographically distant for them. The researcher Nicolas Bricas mentions in particular these "distances" between urban dwellers and places of production. They are cognitive; we no longer know how plants are produced, how our animals are raised. The link between producers and consumers is also impacted. If we take the inner suburbs of Lyon, such as Vénissieux or Vaulx-en-Velin, there is agriculture nearby but there is little connection between younger persons and this agriculture. However, that doesn't mean that they know nothing about it; that would be a cliché. In our country, some may have worked in their grandparents' vegetable garden; other children, for example of North African origin, have family in their native country and have been able to gain first-hand experience, whether in breeding or in farming. This knowledge can also be astute, maintained, familial. x

Claude Fischler

"It's necessary for us to understand and invent a new relationship with food"

Interview by Hannah Benavou

Photos: Romain Bassenne How did the pandemic alter the ritual of the French meal, culturally based on commensality – the practice of eating together – and now marked by the individualisation of eating habits? Here's the opinion of a leading sociologist, whose research focuses on sharing and modes of eating together in the age of individualism.

Can we say that the affection the French have for the table remains intact in these times marked by a pandemic and multiple crises? We have a special relationship with the table. What is eating for the French? A ritual - that is to say a time, a space, company. The time of the meal, the space of the table, the company of the guests and a sequence of shared dishes. If a French person says "I haven't eaten today", it may simply mean that they didn't sit down at the table, even if they ate a sandwich at the counter opposite... Today, the French are still those who stay at the table longest. At 1 p.m., at least 50% of them are eating. In the United Kingdom, it's hardly more than 17%. This history of cuisine and the ritual of the meal remained a cultural anchor until COVID-19 At this point, meals had to be "repatriated" to the home, which constituted a major social disruption. On the one hand, some people rediscovered local products and home cooking. But, at the same time, a fundamental process that started decades ago accelerated: the transformation of the restaurant business into a retail food business. Click-and-collect and home delivery represent the fastest-growing movement. Some establishments have been able to partially compensate for the loss of activity thanks to takeaway options and delivery. The trend was to accentuate the economic logic already at work before: the least possible culinary transformation, the reduction of the workforce. What strikes me personally in terms of lunch options in the city after the lockdown, whether fast food or basic fare, is the simplification and homogenisation of the options. Some chefs and restaurateurs have not returned to their pre-pandemic menus or setups, taking into account the cost-to-ingredient ratio and personnel.

Many French people express the need for "everything, right away". Does this conflict with the need to meet at the table? Commensality, traditionally, in many cultures, reflects the family or social hierarchy: there is the place of the father or the boss, who is served → first, the rules to be respected, etc. And then there is also conviviality – simply, the pleasure or the need to be together. It all seems to become more flexible, more fluid, more informal. The new generation asks new questions. Until then, the style of eating went through the phases of life. By becoming independent, by leaving the family home, one adopted a style liberated from domestic rituals that was less structured, more "random", before settling in a household then in a family, in a profession and returning to a mode of living closer to that of the family of origin. One wonders if Millennials and especially members of Generation Z, born with the century, are still returning, or at least as much, to the habits they grew up with. The changes sometimes seem deeper and more persistent. We must understand the individualisation of eating habits, see if and how our contemporaries are reorganising commensality. Eating together is fundamental. It is largely at the table where learning about a culture, interpersonal or hierarchical relationships, and taking others into account occurs. It all happens through table manners and the teaching of them. If food is becoming more and more individualised, if this learning is done less strictly, to what extent will the constraints linked to collective forms of food rituals be relaxed?

What have you observed about this new way of eating? The meal is also the sharing of an available ration, where everyone must receive their fair share. When the feeling of uncertainty or of a food crisis dissipates, when we benefit from an abundant supply, we forget it a little; we move away from it. This is what has happened in recent decades. But we are seeing the emergence of a new moral

"We have entered an era where we have to invent how to both affirm the individuality of everyone in the group and the solidarity of all humanity..." imperative linked to food. We must eat "right" from three vantage points: health (good nutrition); the ecosystem (the future of the planet and of life); and society (distribution). A new conception, a new ideal of food may rise into view for some. Food at two alternating speeds: on the one hand, for daily life and work, food that saves time and money, is as healthy and functional as possible, eco-responsible, freely and individually regulated. On the other hand, the time in the kitchen and at the restaurant, the group setting and the conviviality...

Institutional catering has also paid a fairly heavy price. What about the table at work? Do we move away from the group when it's time to eat? It seems to me that, at the company, there is everywhere a space of conviviality, exchange and sociability. It can be, depending on the culture or the company, the coffee machine or a space where you can bring – possibly heat up – a snack or a bite to eat. Everyone is together and everyone is there for themselves. But the differences are considerable from one culture to another. In some cultures, you may prefer to isolate yourself to eat. In the United States, for example, you may be more inclined to stay in front of your computer with your sandwich. In France, we tend to gather – around a counter, a table, in the canteen, of course, but also in a public place... In many cultures, like in France, eating alone has long been, and still is, stigmatised. There is a notion of communion in the relationship that the French have with food, but the same goes for the Italian and the Spanish... In these societies historically influenced by Catholicism, the notion of sharing is essential: not sharing what is at the centre of the table is to refuse to receive communion – not to say to be excommunicated. In societies historically marked by Protestantism, individualists, the relationship with food is that of a free and responsible individual. In the United States, a work or business meal is the result of a negotiation based on what each person eats or does not eat, likes or dislikes. We are in the register of a contract and not of communion. Once the agreement is made, all that remains is to sit down at the table, discuss - professionally or personally – and take leave.

This model seems to be progressing almost everywhere; the Latin countries themselves

Claude Fischler is a sociologist and research director at the French National Centre for Scientific Research (CNRS), where has conducted, since 1974, his research on food.

His work focuses in particular on contemporary food considered from various angles: the evolution of food systems in space and time (migration, acculturation, nnovation); food crises and risk perception: the contemporary relationship with the body (corpulence and thinness); sharing and forms of eating together, their evolution in the age of individualism; and the public health issues inherent in these themes (obesity, eating disorders, etc.).

Claude Fischler has notably published, in French, The Homnivore (Editions Odile Jacob), La nourriture (Communications 31, Seuil), Manger magique (Otherwise), Du vin (Odile Jacob) and, with Estelle Masson, Manger. Français, Européens et Américains face à l'alimentation (Odile Jacob).

1. In "Les alimentations particulières: mangerons-nous encore ensemble demain?", under the direction of Claude Fischler, published by Odile Jacob.

are maybe in this sense "Protestantising" a little more each day. Perhaps the pandemic has rather favoured this process in which everyone expresses their choices and especially their dietary exclusions (the without-without, neither-nor), as we had diagnosed 10 years ago.1 Today, we need to understand and, in short, invent a new relationship with food. The hospitality professions are now grappling with an anthropological reversal in the relationship with food and with others. On the one hand, we see the multiplication of substitutions, removals and options, along with the inextricable problems they raise. It may seem paradoxical that, as soon as you move upscale in food service, with "tasting menus" for example, you agree to have less of a choice if not to give it up voluntarily, at least in part...

Towards which model, which transformation, are we heading? It is not a small revolution because the fact of being able to say what you want or do not want when you are hosted means that you eliminate or reduce reciprocity in hospitality. Reciprocity is: I receive you, and therefore I give to you, but you give to me by accepting what you receive from me. If you impose on me or refuse what I give you, this reciprocity is called into question. We are in a phase of transformation, of questioning, but the new model is not yet clear and viable. What is clear is a fundamental individualisation, a very long-term process by which each individual becomes increasingly free and responsible for their choices. Since the origins of humankind, since the mastery of fire, eating has always been a collective affair because an essential human characteristic has been, in evolution, sociability, cooperation, and therefore the regulation and sharing of resources in the group. We have entered an era where we must invent how to both affirm the individuality of each person in the group and the solidarity of all humanity... x

Future(s) Food

Futur(e)s Food is the first French initiative to reward innovative and committed entrepreneurs, marking a turning point in the evolution of food service, never so concerned about the crucial challenges of tomorrow as now.

Food entrepreneur. The terminology is one of the most recent given birth to by food service. Simply put, a food entrepreneur is someone who starts their own business in the food or culinary industry, and who does something new in the area of food and business. Because "for it to work, it has to work", from a business point of view.

In any case, this reflects the first promotion of the initiative codirected by Service Compris, which has been supporting restaurateurs and catering entrepreneurs since 2018, Transgourmet, a major national player in the delivery of food and hygiene products for catering, bakery and pastry professionals, and Sirha Food, GL events media, a specialist in food service and food events. As Julien Fouin, co-founder of Service Compris, told us recently:

'We wanted to reward and honour all the players in the food ecosystem, from the ground to the plate, for their admirable, disruptive work, in the sense that they oblige us to look at one reality from another angle, offer a new experience in a way of doing something. To make the world a better place, we must continue to seek improvements."

Road to Sirha Lyon

At the end of the process, five projects are identified in the categories of Agriculture, Reconversion, Solidarity, Experience and Innovation (read the following pages), guaranteed levers of the food service of tomorrow in terms of vital forces, in all senses of the

The organising trio relied on the knowledge and fieldwork of 20 sleuths. Journalists, organisers of food events, culinary chroniclers and writers, influencers, and men and women in the field from Transgourmet... "Scouts" who, after crisscrossing the entire territory, have identified 196 projects in seven French regions. A first jury narrowed this list down to 25 projects that qualified for a decisive second round presided over by a new jury, made up of six leading personalities.

Restaurateur Nadia Sammut (Kom & Sal), the eco-conscious director Edouard Bergeon, Elisabeth Laville and Anaïs Denoits, of the marketing agency specialising in sustainable development Utopies, Fanny Giansetto, the founder of Écotable, which, in particular, labels virtuous restaurants, Brune Poirson, director of sustainable development at Accor, and Robin Panfili, culinary journalist for the digital media platform Konbini, evaluated the 25 finalists, focusing on the independence of the structure, whether pure creations or takeovers, driven by the manifest desire to experiment, to pave the way for implementing new models and entrepreneurial approaches. Promises for the future and, in short, models to be encouraged and developed.

Initially, there were 196 projects. In the end, there were 25, which were evaluated by a jury tasked with awarding five of them prizes in the Agriculture, Reconversion, Solidarity, Experience and Innovation categories. Five areas that are close to the hearts of the initiators of Futur(e)s Food, who are keen to support visionary initiatives for the world of tomorrow. And the winners are...

Agriculture Prize La Ferme Sans Nom

Sylvain Przybylski and Juliette Mauduit 61430 Athis-Val-de-Rouvre

If there is one area that concentrates the challenges of tomorrow, it is agriculture, a sector subject to all the pressures – environmental (climate in peril) and societal (low attractiveness and renewal) – in particular. The Futur(e)s Food prize in this category recognises an initiative around farming and livestock practices. This award goes to Sylvain Przybylski and Juliette Mauduit, from La Ferme Sans Nom, the first artisanal and independent seed company in Normandy, located in the Orne, nestled between the valleys of what is called the Suisse

Normande (Norman Switzerland). They have also founded a farmer's school at their place, where they train individuals and professionals in ecological farming with their theoretical and empirical knowledge. As Sylvain puts it, "Seeds are intangible heritage that is passed on." Being trialled this year in a monthly and thematic format - hot compost, growing mushrooms on wood, preserving crops, making hay, etc. – at 55 euros on average, available via online registration. Every first Sunday of the month, there is a lesson and practice session on gardening on living soil: "And you follow your garden through the seasons. In August, they compile the lessons accompanying the monthly themes for a 10-day training course, including lodging, entitled Food autonomy." In the medium term, Sylvain and Juliette would like to set up a training course on artisanal

'We launched the first season in 2020. But the transition dates back to 2013. I was already doing seeds before," says Sylvain. As for Juliette, she was born in Alençon, not far off, and returned to the country after a first life as an artist, musician and filmmaker. Sylvain, a multi-instrumentalist, made music for the images (credits, documentary soundtracks, etc.).

How did they learn? "It was 90% fieldwork, 9% observation, 0.5% books and 0.5% exchanges with older members of the community. They are the ones who partly put us in the situation we are in today, but they are super passionate about a subject, a species; it's important for us to harvest that, as information," Sylvain enthuses. Juliette adds: "There was a loss of biodiversity in terms of vegetable plants after the Second World War, with the catalogues and all that; 70% of vegetable varieties disappeared and then some knowledge was lost." Sylvain continues: "We produce seeds adapted to local conditions; we want to ensure a certain geographical origin and that they are produced on living soil. Zero tillage, permanent cover. We are the only independent producers in Normandy and in France to do this, from production to marketing. It can be reproduced anywhere, by adapting to the climate."

Reconversion Prize Baston

50 Rue du Hâ, 33000 Bordeaux

This prize exists because, sociologically speaking, the food service sector is full of people who are making a radical change of direction in order to "make sense" and "be conscientious" – values that have come back full force by extricating themselves from the global chaos in which the world has been plunged since the manifestation of the extreme fragility of our ecosystem, plagued by climatic hazards and crises of all kinds: environmental, economic, political and social. According to a survey by the Conseil national de l'enseignement agricole privé (National Council for Private Agricultural Education), 79% of those employed would be prepared to change careers to work in nature and the living environment. Pauline Celle, 33, and Julien Borie, 37, are among them. They opened Baston in May 2021, "a bakery in a restaurant", as they describe it. Pauline is a baker; Iulien is a cook.

But they have no training. A specialised educator in and around La Rochelle, Julien worked with persons with autism whom the company accompanies until adulthood, and then after the age of 55, but not in between. He pivoted about 10 years ago. He wanted "something concrete, a more active job. You were always rubbing shoulders with the associations or the administration at every stage." He started out in small internships, through the Pôle Emploi, in restaurants in La Rochelle. When it came time to "jump into the unknown", he asked himself: "I'm almost 30. I'm going back for a CAP (Certificat Aptitude Professionnel). Am I wasting a year on something that I'm ultimately not going to like?"Well, he liked it. "Contrary to our parents and grandparents, our generation has understood that you don't do a job for life." He worked at Hortense in La Rochelle before setting up Lacanau, a small business with friends. Life then led him to Bordeaux (Echo and Chiocchio), where he met Pauline five years ago.

Pauline had never set foot in a bakery lab. Originally from Bordeaux, she worked in communications in a town near Angers. She admits, "I didn't enjoy what I was doing." After three years, she travelled for a few months, then returned to Bordeaux. "Staying in an office didn't appeal to me." She did her apprenticeship at Paulin, in Cap-Ferret, then honed her skills during "two or three short training courses, right and left".

And why the name Baston? One can imagine an allusion to the challenge that this turn of phrase induces, but that's not it... "We were on holiday in Italy," recalls Pauline. "We wanted a name that was a bit like music or a fanzine, not too restaurant-like. On the road, some old people were eating chestnuts. Marrons, castagne... One thing led to another and we came up with Baston."

Solidarity Prize Le République

49 Rue de la République, 13002 Marseille

Projects in this category demonstrate an approach committed to ecology, the circular economy and people. Le République, in Marseille, led by chef Sébastien Richard and the association by the name of La Petite Lili, brought together all of its qualities. To sit down at Le République is to participate in the creation of jobs in the field of integration while also allowing everyone to enjoy a meal at the restaurant. Apart from the bowling alley in the basement, nothing distinguishes Le République, on Rue de la Rép, a stone's throw away from the Old Port, from a classic restaurant. However, it is when the bill appears that the magic happens: while some will pay around 30 euros for the menu of the day, others will leave a symbolic euro for the same fare.

The latter have been identified by local partner associations. The ambition of Le République is to democratise the act of eating in a restaurant by making it more accessible to as many people as possible: single women, students, families with modest incomes... "The idea came to us during lockdown. We were inspired by solidarity initiatives such as Refettorio or Wanted Café," says Sébastien Richard, the former chef of → a Michelin-starred restaurant in Istres and a co-founder of the place. To his knowledge, no other establishment practises this hybrid model, where the bills of some - incremented by diversified financing – makes it possible to cover the tabs of those with less of an ability to pay.

For Sylvain Martin, another instigator of Le République, "the double challenge is to prove to all those who doubted it that social mixing in the same place is possible, and that it is possible to bring both groups back to the restaurant." Some customers come back every month, and even become volunteers for Petite Lili, the umbrella association encompassing Le République.

After nine months in operation, the challenge seems to have been met, thanks to a tailor-made team effort: of the 22 employees on the team, 15 are on integration contracts and very few had ever set foot in a professional kitchen.

For the teams as well as for the customers, the restaurant of tomorrow must be thought of differently, with solidarity as an addition. And for the future, the team at Le République is thinking big: "A high-level culinary school, accessible to as many people as possible" and which would provide training in all aspects of catering.

Experience Prize Les Beaux Mets

Les Baumettes, 13009 Marseille

It doesn't get any more disruptive and innovative than this bistronomic table, the first of its kind in France, open to the public in the heart of the Baumettes prison in Marseille. An experience for the customer and the staff, since the team, apart from the supervisors (chefs and maître de salle), is made up of inmates who are at the end of their sentences. It's not so much the act of eating in a prison environment that constitutes an experience at Les Beaux Mets but the path itself – as intellectual as it is curious in the unusual sense – to the plate. A path traced by the Festin association, based in Marseille, since 2016. Their raison d'être is to imagine and deploy excellent integration paths in the catering industry for people who are far-removed from the workforce. Les Beaux Mets is the fruit of a beautiful alignment of planets: that of the Festin association, under the direction of Armand Hurault, who was interested in the prison population when, at the same time, the Marseille Interregional Directorate of Prison Services wanted to create a mechanism to prepare eligible inmates for their release. The result was an integration restaurant. Les Beaux Mets opened its doors last November, after three years of preparation.

A socio-professional integration project that is unprecedented in France,

Les Beaux Mets is a bistronomic table

in an integration workshop imagined and set up in the heart of the Baumettes penitentiary centre in Marseille. More precisely, it is housed in the former women's section, which became SAS, the Structure d'accom-pagnement à la sortie, in 2018. This is where people sentenced to less than two years or who have less than two years to serve are imprisoned. The structure offers multidisciplinary support aimed at social reintegration and preparation for release. The objective is to help reduce the recidivism rate in France, which is 42%, according to the Ministry of Justice. It presents an opportunity to encourage people to enter the restaurant industry, where there are some 200,000 vacancies. At Les Beaux Mets, 13 inmates, not necessarily inclined towards the restaurant business, are on duty from 8:30 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. Divided into two teams that rotate from one week to the next, there are seven kitchen assistants, under the responsibility of Sandrine Sollier and Thaïs Clemens, the chefs, and six supervisory kitchen assistants, trained by Marc Balthazard, a charming maître d'hôtel who wanted to end his career by "making sense". For Year 1 of Les Beaux Mets, the stakeholders estimate that they will be able to support 40 inmates, all of whom will be employed under a 26-hour prison contract, paid at 45% of the minimum wage. Carole Guillerm, head of the integration project for Festin, explains that "it puts them back into the world of work through practice; they learn on the job, and we give them skills, knowledge and know-how that they can use in other sectors as well". The members of the "brigade" know that they are indebted to their bosses for the chance of a lifetime to learn, behind bars, an occupation from the pros. They know the competence of the two leaders rather than their authority. "They are very diligent and feel valued," observes Sandrine Sollier. Her management style is in tune with the era: "We take the time to explain things calmly; no one shouts in my kitchen. We don't treat people like we used to in the restaurant business." Sandrine sees herself working at Les Beaux Mets for a few more years. She is aware that she is a pioneer, the first female chef at the first prison restaurant open to the public. An experience in itself.

Another experience. At an exceptional place, there are exceptional entry conditions. Four days out, online reservations open on the website of Les Beaux Mets. Time to check the guest's criminal record. Not just anyone can enter a prison, even if it's to go to a restaurant. You have to arrive at least half an hour before your reservation; the entrance is the red gate, Traverse de Rabat, near the Calanque de Morgiou. Then, you stop by the reception desk, where you put your unauthorised objects in a locker. In other words, everything, prejudices and all – except your credit card. The menus are priced at 28 and 35 euros. A security gate and a flight of spiral steps later, and you enter Les Beaux Mets, an elegant space with about 40 seats, incongruous if you remember the place where you are about to have lunch.

The interior architecture, designed by Rougerie+Tangram and the Maï workshop, offers a view and the comfort of curvaceous furniture and silky materials breaking with the rather square geometry of the surroundings; the warm tones recall the bisque-orange of the building site containers outside, barely punctuated by the grey of the coils of barbed wire on the walls. The tables are nicely set – a water glass only, alcohol not being allowed in prison. Marc Balthazard greets us with a beaming smile. He has the Southern repartee, which relaxes the atmosphere and cheers up the team in the dining room. They are busy, a little nervous, making their first mocktails: orange/beetroot/apple, kiwi-ginger; lime/grapefruit/star anise/green cardamom/sparkling apple juice and grated nutmeg... Homemade syrups and juices. On the shorter menu (3 starters, 3 main courses, 3 desserts), there are vegan, vegetarian, dairy-free and gluten-free options... In other words, all the current trend boxes are ticked. For example, a vegetable monochrome as a starter, a small-spelt risotto, cabbage and a tangy beetroot sauce as a main course, and a creative apple dessert, all of which were worked on with the help of Michel Portos, a two-starred Michelin chef from Marseille who is very involved in social integration and the prison world. In the future, Sandrine will invite other chefs to share their signature dishes, putting them on the menu and giving master classes to the team of inmates. Another example of the bridge between "inside and outside" that Les Beaux Mets aims to build. The experience on offer is also intended to change the way people look at detention. And why not set such an instructive precedent there?

Innovation Prize Bout' à Bout'

The objective of this award is to recognise innovative entrepreneurs in the service of food. Innovation is the successful exploitation of new ideas, the creation, development and implementation of a new product, process or service, with the aim of improving effectiveness, efficiency or competitive advantage.

And it is the Nantes-based company Bout' à Bout' that wins it. Their goal is to relaunch the recycling of glass containers, primarily bottles, in the Pays de la Loire region. In tandem with the distributors (shops, restaurants and cafés) and thanks to the actors of integration. "Our model is very simple," says Yann Priou, the dynamic general manager of Bout' à Bout'. "We collect, we sort, we wash and we resell." As it was before. The deposit, i.e. reuse of the bottle up to 50 times, was gradually abandoned in the 1980s in favour of single-use packaging and plastic. But that was a different time with different habits. Reuse has a real ecological impact, a → major concern of our century, for all generations combined.

It was in front of a bin for glass, to the sound of breaking, that Célie Couché decided to take action in 2016 by founding the association Bout' à Bout'. Today, 17 billion bottles are sold each year in France, 30% of which are glass. One bottle represents 300 grammes of CO2, and European glass factories produce 11 million tonnes of CO2 per year. Add to this a global economic and energy context, where glassworks, mainly in Eastern Europe, are under extreme pressure, and the deposit becomes a supply chain of the future, with an immediate environmental and social impact.

The intrinsic innovation of Bout' à Bout' is to improve what already exists, but the first innovation lies in the coordination of the company's activities: a tailor-made digital interface which helps manage the incredible network set up by Bout' à Bout'. "It's the bottles that connect us," says the director, proud of these integration contracts, of securing approval from ESUS (Entreprise solidaire d'utilité sociale), of the chain of control that follows the route of the bottles. "We" are the producers – around 100 to date – the collection point operators, the washing site and the stores.

Another innovation is the construction of their own washing site, equipped with technology, in Carquefou. An investment of 2 million euros for, eventually, 4,000 square metres of floor space, which will mobilise around 15 employees. The work is organised in three areas. First, the sorting of bottles by size, small and large bottles (33 and 75 cl). Then the washing. For this, Bout' à Bout' relied, until the opening of Carquefou, on the family business Boutin Services, which employs about 50 people in Clisson, less than an hour from Nantes. Their machine, from the 1970s but in service since 1994, is a 12-row unit that runs at 6,000 to 7,000 bottles per hour and is currently the only one in the Loire Valley. And, the last station: the final control and the palletization of the empty bottles, all gleaming and watertight after human inspection for chips and other defects, optical monitoring and future innovation, in Carquefou. They are ready to go for a ride. It takes 20 centilitres of water to wash a bottle. The statistics, which have been verified, are impressive: reuse saves 79% CO2, 33% water and 76% energy. Meanwhile, it takes heating at 1,500 degrees for 24 hours to recycle glass! In 2021, Bout' à Bout' enabled 500,000 bottles to be returned to deposits. The figure should at least triple in 2022. In the spring 2023, the Carquefou plant will have opened. Its objective is to wash 15 million bottles per year initially and 60 million in the longer term. We must also democratise

the cash register, a working tool for the whole chain, from collection to resale: "It has to become a standard again." The next step: large and mediumsized stores, where Bout' à Bout' racks will blend into the decor alongside the automated services to which consumers are now accustomed.

"We have everything to succeed. We have all the stars in alignment, a talented team that we will continue to develop, major industrial partners," says Yann Priou. The turnover, made up of services to partners, sales in shops and resale, announced for 2023? One million euros, "The number will eventually be 150 million," he says confidently. "And we're going to do it with the desire to have an impact. We want to democratise the use of the deposit from now on. The system that Célie has set up is brilliant, but now we need to make it a national industrial supply chain. Standardise reuse," says Yann Priou. It must become odd to break a glass bottle. x
